

Equity in Midwifery Education Webinar Series

Incorporating Antiracism Coursework into a Cultural Competency Curriculum

Presenters:

Wendy M. Gordon, CPM, LM, MPH and
Safiya A. U. McCarter, ND, MSAOM

*CEUs available (ACNM & MEAC)

You

Listen

Webinar recording available as VIDEO or AUDIO

Watch/Listen to hear firsthand about lessons learned at one masters level midwifery education program that has developed and improved a curriculum to center race and racism in education and clinical care as part of their commitment to fostering equity and social justice.

Come explore why:

- Students may not be effective in cultural humility or creating a culturally safe practice until they understand their role in issues of social power and dominant social norms.
 - Incorporating an in-depth exploration of the impacts of racism, power, and privilege as social determinants of health is a challenging but necessary component of cultural competency training for all health care practitioners.
 - A lengthy primer may be necessary to orient students to racism, power, and privilege in US society and how these impact health and the provider-patient relationship.
- Faculty must be well equipped to address social differences that inevitably arise in the classroom.

Presenters published on this topic in the Journal of Midwifery and Women's Health - Nov 2016

Register to attend future webinars: <http://eepurl.com/cEer4r>

For information about how to receive CEUs, email equitymidwifery@gmail.com